

Junior Citizens' Day

Elders Aren't Tough Enough, Say Students

Junior Citizens who took over the city councils job last night proved to be tougher than their elders.

The juniors, sitting in on the regular city council session, turned down a request from Magnavox Laboratories for permission to use trailers as temporary office space.

The firm is planning a 97,000-square-foot addition to present facilities, but new contracts require the addition of about 150 new employees at once, L. E. Justice, general manager, said.

The junior council turned Justice down on a 5-2 vote, but Magnavox won permission for the trailer offices from the senior council.

"We give lip service to attracting new industry to town," H. Ted Olson remarked, "but to ask a firm to rent office space and commute with their draftsmen isn't encouraging. We've got a trailer in our own back yard."

The request was granted on a 6-1 vote, Magnavox will use 11 trailers for a period of not more than one year.

PAUL A. MEDEARIS

Medearis, Early Oil Man, Dies

Funeral services for Paul Archie Medearis, 64, founder of the Medaris Oilwell Supply Corp. of Torrance, were held in Ingelwood and burial was in a family plot in Ventura.

Mr. Medearis was born in Seymour, Tex., in March, 1901, and started working in the oilfields as a roustabout in Texas and Oklahoma. He came to California in the early 1920s, working as a driller for a time.

He became interested in designing and manufacturing products for the oilfield industry, and opened his own business in South Gate in 1935. He moved to Torrance in 1948 and his corporation still operates at 21000 S. Normandie Ave.

Equipment designed and built by his firm is operating in most countries of the world that have a drilling program, and in recent years the firm has perfected a number of designs used in off-shore drilling.

Mr. Medearis lost his eyesight nearly two years ago, but has taken and active part in his business despite the handicap.

He is survived by his wife, Cray (Betty), and two brothers, Frank and Elmer.

PV Agency Adds Major Ad Account

Luxury Homes, one of the largest Real Estate developers in California, has announced the appointment of Bryan Hardwick Associates of Palos Verdes Estates to handle the advertising for all of its developments throughout the state.

Building primarily with the Dutch Haven trade name, the firm is merchandising developments in San Jose, Sacramento, Concord, Fullerton, Anaheim, Huntington Beach, and Thousand Oaks.

Although no budgets have been announced for 1966, the account is believed to be sizable as the sales volume of the firm will exceed $25 million this year.

Agency president Bryan Hardwick indicated that a media mix of radio, television, newspaper, outdoor, and direct mail are being considered for the new year. Hardwick will act as account supervisor with Bill Dodge as account executive.

Luxury Homes is the third major acquisition for the Palos Verdes Estates-based organization in the last 90 days. Technicolor and the Janss Corp.'s Conejo Valley public relations account were added during September and October.

Former agency for the Real Estate developer was Harlan-Raub of Orange County.

Pacific Telephone Adds Program on Moon Flight

The story of man's greatest dream, a voyage to the moon, has been added to the programs offered to the public at no cost by Pacific Telephone's speakers bureau.

The program, named "Project Apollo" after the United States' effort to land a man on the moon before 1970, is available to service, civic, business, social, school, and church groups, according to Dick Hunter, head of Pacific's speakers bureau.

Organizations wishing to have the program presented at one of their meetings should call the speakers bureau at 621-3839, Hunter said.

THE NEW program will trace the history of man's dreams of flight and reaching the moon from Greek mythology to the current lunar effort of the United States.

Speakers will outline some of the great discoveries which have made a flight to the moon a possibility in the near future. The program will be illustrated by woodcuts from Jules Verne's imaginative

"From the Earth to the Moon," written almost a century ago.

Using a scale model of the Apollo spacecraft, speakers will describe in detail the planned flight to the moon and explain the various functions of the multi-stage rocket.

OTHER FREE programs offered by Pacific's speakers bureau include "An Adventure in Sound," a history of the transmission and recording of sound; "Breath of Life," a demonstration of mouth-to-mouth resuscitation; "Hello Around the World," the story of undersea communications cable, and "Laser," a talk about one of the marvels of the space age.

Also "Rockets Red Glare," the story of the North American Air Defense Command; "Telstar," a program about the first communications satellite, and "Microwaves," the story of how television programs and telephone messages are transmitted without wires.
